...Unfortunately, I wasn't around when Star Wars premiered. As matter of fact, I was conceived days after it came out! My mother says that's why I love those movies so much: she was pregnant with me and my brother when she saw it. However, just because I wasn't part of the Star Wars generation, it doesn't mean that the trilogy hasn't affected my life. Now, I'm the only 15-year-old girl literally obsessed with those lovable faraway characters in my school. Yoda's and Obi-Wan's wisdom, Luke's innocence, Han's sarcasm and Leia's independence have had a great effect on molding the person I am and will be.

Not only did Star Wars captivate me but Indiana Jones took my breath away! There's only one man who could wear that fedora and trek across the world and that's Harrison Ford. He is literally my favorite actor. He has brought a special light to all of his characters.

I have never felt as comfortable or as complete as I do when I watch a movie or TV show graced by George Lucas' imagination. Like Mr. Lucas, I feel like that galaxy far, far away is like a home and I have friends there. They're a good way to send me away from my own boring life. I just finished reading The Last Command, the final chapter in Timothy Zahn's novels. I thought the book truly brought the characters to life just as well as watching them in the movies. I cannot wait until the prequel trilogy comes out in 1997!

Believe me, I'm counting the months!

Amy Flowers, Richboro, PA.

...I, too, like millions of others, am totally engrossed in the sheer magic, mystery and adventure of Star Wars. Few things in life can equal that feeling in your heart when John Williams' majestic theme marks the beginning of the greatest adventure story of all. I was three when Star Wars first began in 1977. Although I don't remember seeing it at the movies, I distinctly remember The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi. In fact, Return of the Jedi was the last movie that my entire family went to see together.

I am from South Africa and I can't begin to tell you how difficult it is to find Star Wars merchandise and magazines such as yours. I recently received my first copy of The Lucasfilm Fan Club Magazine. WOW is all I can say! At last I finally have found a place where I can share my enthusiasm. The magazine is brilliant! I can't begin to tell you how happy it makes me to see that there are so many fans out there that share my passion for Star Wars. And when I read that there were three more episodes in the works I did another spin! Star Wars is not only limited to America. It affects everyone from all over the world who is young at heart and shares the basic values and morals that Star Wars teaches us. I would just like to end this letter by saying a special and sincere thank you to George Lucas. You have created a special magic in your work that keeps people young. You've given us hope where there is despair, courage where there is fear, humor where there is none and values in a world of turmoil. You have taught us that being good is right and that goodness is a virtue and quality that every person must strive for. Good can triumph over evil. Heroes are once again a part of our world!

...I am a devoted Star Wars fan. I have been since I saw Return of the Jedi in 1983. I greatly admire George Lucas and his vivid imagination that has brought us one of the greatest sagas of all time. When I was younger, I decided to go into the entertainment industry. I am now 22 years old and this dream is still very alive within me. I am a professional singer who desires to become a recording artist, but within the past few years I have come to terms with my desire to act as well. And, most recently, I have shown some interest in film production.

I believe today's programming has left little to the creative imagination and this is why I admire Mr. Lucas' work so much. Not only does his work allow for our imaginations to branch out into a world of fantasy and adventurous history (Young Indy), it also allows for young people to admire characters with a certain integrity not often seen in the work of other filmmakers.

Thank you for providing a fan club for people who just can't stop being a fan. I will always embrace the fantasy of my childhood and endear the characters I came to love so much, for somewhere in a galaxy far, far away, I know they are real.

Renee Cole, Bowie, MD

...I felt it was about time I wrote and said how much I am enjoying The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles. Out of all the TV shows I watch and tape this is the only one that I find myself counting the days in anticipation for the next episode. You can imagine my distress back in October when the show was pulled after only four new episodes (I was on the phone with ABC at least once a week demanding it be put back on). I think Young Indy is the best show currently on the air. The recent guest appearance by Harrison Ford was a great treat (although it was quite short - I want more!) The show has exactly the right mix of action, drama, humor and (God forbid!) educational value. History was always one of my least favorite classes in high school, but now I'm actually starting to find myself interested in it thanks to Mr. Lucas. I just hope that low ratings don't mean a premature end for Young Indy. Is George Lucas considering releasing the show on video? I'd really like to own commercial tapes of the entire series. I hope if Lucas does release them on video he considers including cut scenes that were filmed (I've seen stills of such scenes and the children's book and comic book adaptations tend to include these scenes). I'd also be interested to see how many other people would be interested in seeing an extended version of Star Wars being released in 1997 for the 20th anniversary.

...Is ABC again taking The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles off the air? George Lucas has done an excellent job of weaving in historical figures into Young Indy's life and presenting a series that is as educational as it is exciting to behold. It will be truly deplorable if ABC discontinues so excellent a show.

I am a graduate student at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, Texas, and I must confess I love the character George Lucas has created in the person of Indiana Jones. The study of history and archaeology have become more exciting to me because of Lucas' character. I have diligently applied myself to learning more and more languages (Hebrew, Greek, Latin and Spanish), and my love for learning and teaching is partly attributable to George Lucas' creativity, scholarship and excitement that makes for a complete and well-rounded human being. All of these traits are shown weekly in the Young Indiana Jones Chronicles. Seeing young Henry Jones, Jr. growing up, learning, loving people and life to the fullest really impresses me to continue to do the same. I sincerely hope that this wonderful series will not be taken off the air.

I was a History and English major in college and now I am studying church history, biblical languages and theology in seminary before I segue into biblical archaeology. I very well may be following in Dr. Jones' footsteps!

LISTENING TO STAR WARS

by Lisa Cowan

Imagine six and one-half hours of Star Wars with no pictures. Does that sound strange, ridiculous, impossible? Not if you remember the remarkable 1981 National Public Radio version of Star Wars. The thirteen-episode radio drama brought the adventures of Luke Skywalker to the public in a whole new wonderful way. And now, thanks to Lucasfilm, NPR, and the HighBridge Company, this terrific show can once again be enjoyed by all, on audio cassette, compact disk, and on the air-waves.

The film version of Star Wars lasts only two hours. By contrast, the radio drama gives the listener six and one-half hours of story and scenes, that previously, we could only wish for and imagine. The initial 30-minute episode takes place on Tatooine with Luke and his friends, Windy, Fixer and others. They talk and tease and race their skyhoppers through Beggar's Canyon. Luke's best friend Biggs returns to confide in Luke about the Rebellion he hopes to join. We learn more about Aunt Beru and Uncle Owen. Other episodes take us to Alderaan where Princess Leia receives the secret plans from her father prior to embarking on the daring mission that ends with her capture by Darth Vader. We hear how R2-D2 and C-3PO first meet, and we thrill to the wild encounters of Han Solo and Chewbacca with the "scum and villainy" of Mos Eisley!

Richard Toscan, a production executive at KUSC-FM — a National Public Radio affiliate station at the University of Southern California — came up with the idea to put the very visual movie on radio. He proposed the plan to George Lucas (a USC alumnus). Lucas liked the idea and donated the use of the story rights to KUSC and NPR.

Actors Mark Hamill and Anthony Daniels reprised their roles of Luke Skywalker and C-3PO. Even though we only hear their voices, both Hamill and Daniels had to be very physical during the tapings to achieve the right vocal emotion and effect. Daniels found it impossible to do the voice of C-3PO without emulating the jerky mechanical gestures associated with his golden alter-

Perry King to play Han Solo, Ann Sachs for Princess Leia, Bernard Behrens to play Ben Kenobi, and Brock Peters for the voice of Vader. The different voices only took a small bit of getting used to, and the pace, music, sound effects and interesting dialog of each episode swept the listener along.

WALKING IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF A WOOKIEE

By Salman A. Nensi

Since his first appearance as Star Wars' Chewbacca in 1977, Peter Mayhew has been interviewed many times and has been asked every question possible. And after countless interviews, what is the one question he dislikes most?

"What does Chewbacca think about? What goes on inside a Wookiee's head?" "I think it's up to the people who look at the character to make their own minds up about that," says the blue-eyed 7'3" Mayhew. "That question always annoyed me a little bit." Other dislikes include questions that invade his privacy since Mayhew is a very private man, but, he admits, "it is very nice after ten years to be able to sit down and talk to someone. It's amazing to me that people are still interested in Star Wars after all these years."

Mayhew's acting career began with the film Sinbad and the Eye of the Tiger, which starred Patrick Wayne and Jane Seymour. Mayhew played the Minotaur. "I was working as an orderly at the London Teaching Hospital and this guy from the Guinness Book of Records was looking for people with big feet," Mayhew recalls. "I don't know how, but he was in the hospital where I was working. He took pictures of my feet." The researcher also took a picture of Mayhew and a colleague. "The guy I was working with was about five foot two, very, very, very small...and I'm seven foot three. You can imagine the difference." The picture made it into the local paper and was seen by two associate producers. "They were looking for someone to play the Minotaur in Sinbad. They phoned the paper, got my number and called to ask me if I'd be interested in the part," recalls Mayhew. "I asked them what it quite reasonable career."

While filming Sinbad, Mayhew spent three weeks in Spain and three in Malta. "It completely opened my eyes to how the other half lived." He agrees there are both good and bad sides to fame and fortune but, "If you didn't have the down sides, the up sides wouldn't be as good as they are."

During the production of Sinbad, Mayhew made friends with the special effects crew and makeup personnel. When Star Wars began casting calls from London's Elstree Studios, they put his name forward. "I got a call from the production secretary and she asked if I was interested. I said yes, certainly. I saw George Lucas and Gary Kurtz. When I walked into George's office, rough sketches of all the characters were laid out on one wall. Of the two big ones, one was Darth Vader and the other was Chewbacca. I wondered which one they wanted me to play. George and I talked about it and I explained what I had been doing and that I'd had very little involved. They said — going on location, being away for about six weeks, everything will be paid for, all your expenses will be met plus you'll receive a salary." The producers asked for an answer in 24 hours. Mayhew's heart told him to say yes, "but, remember, I had a job which I liked and I had to find my boss in the morning and ask her if I could have the time off. Luckily, she said yes...no problem. That was basically the start of a experience in acting. That didn't seem to worry him at all. That was basically the interview and he said, 'Right, the part is yours.' It was as simple as that. In fact, within an hour I was in the costume area getting measured up. It was the easiest film I'd ever auditioned for. At the time it was terrifying because, not having done many auditions before, I didn't quite know what to expect. So I just took it naturally and thought, 'Right, take the bull by the horns, get in there and explain what you've been doing.'

Mayhew found his Star Wars experience quite enlightening. "I learned a hell of a lot. It was great, a lot of banging about, but when you were working it was enjoyable. Just standing there watching the other actors as well as doing my part was great fun. The time went quickly."

After finishing Star Wars, Mayhew went back to work as an orderly. "It was great to work on Star Wars. I got a leave of absence but when we finished, I went back to work. These things take time to get finished - the editing and everything else. I went back to pushing patients around, back to doing my normal routine until the release date."

Once the press got a hold of the Star Wars phenomenon, life became a little more complicated. There were demands for interviews, public relations and promotional events but Mayhew's boss gave him all the time off he needed. "There was no problem, no two ways about it because it was also an ego trip for the hospital."

Mayhew continued as an orderly until he was approached to reprise the role of Chewbacca in The Empire Strikes Back. "I had to make a conscious decision," says Mayhew. "I decided to go professional, give up my day job as they say. I haven't looked back since. It's one decision that I've made that I've never regretted."

That decision led Mayhew to film Return of the Jedi, the film he enjoyed the most. "They were a good crew to work with. The whole movie was fun to work on. The best was when we were working with the little lads and lasses out in Oregon. It was great fun. We were in a logging camp filming and I was warned not to go wandering around off set." Oregon, Mayhew was told, is Bigfoot country. But did he obey? "Too bloody true," he states laughing. "I didn't wander at all because I don't like guns any more than anyone else does!"

To get a tube of buckshot in my back...no way! When I was in costume and I took my mask off, I looked exactly like Bigfoot!"

Six years ago, Mayhew moved to West Yorkshire from London to start a new business. "It's lovely," he says smiling. "I was able to completely change lifestyle. Living in suburban London is like living on the edge of L.A. I felt I wanted, no needed, a change. I can look out my front window and I can see right over the moors and it's beautiful! It IS nice. And it's a complete change from movie-making.

"I'm in a partnership with three fellows and we make wooden bed frames - the base of the bed," he continues. Mayhew operates the machines himself but is quick "Return of the Jedi was fun to work on. We were in a logging camp (in Oregon) filming and I was warned not to go wandering around off the set." Oregon, Mayhew was told, is Bigfoot country. "I didn't wander at all because I don't like guns any more than anyone else does! When I took my mask off, I looked exactly like Bigfoot!"

to dispel the notion that he's a carpenter. "There's a hell of a difference between a carpenter and a machine minder. A carpenter uses saws, chisels and wood-working equipment. All we do is set the machine up and basically push planks of wood through it. The machine does all the work. It's like a production line." Mayhew and his partners produce between six and seven thousand complete bed frames a day.

Looking back, he never thought about being an actor while growing up, and since filming Jedi, Mayhew hasn't acted at all. Typically British, he wanted to be a steam-train engine driver when he was younger. "I wanted to do as well as I could throughout my life. I wasn't particularly bothered by what I did. You're only put on this earth once. You might as well enjoy what you're doing while you're here." Another wonderful piece of Mayhew philosophy - "Oh, I'm full of it, I'm afraid!"

"I like a bit of attention and fame, who doesn't?" Mayhew feels lucky that, unlike some of his fellow Star Wars actors, he can walk down the street without being recognized all the time. "It's nice when you can relax and not worry about being famous."

Like all Star Wars fans, Mayhew is looking forward to seeing more movies from George Lucas' space saga because he knows why Star Wars has endured over the years. "It is exciting and it is escapism and that is what's lacking in this world today!"

STAR WARS: THE ORIGINAL RADIO DRAMA (L148A & B)

When this landmark production was first broadcast on National Public Radio in 1981, it generated the biggest response in the network's history: 50,000 letters and phone calls in a single week, 750,000 listeners per episode, and a subsequent 40-percent jump in the overall NPR audience.

It's real triumph, however, is an artistic one. Inspired by the special demands and unique possibilities of radio, the producers created an enhanced, expanded version of the story, with characters and episodes not seen in the film. Then through brilliant audio engineering, they carefully constructed a universe of pure sound — a shimmering realm of imagination that is beyond the reach of cinema. The result is a Star Wars that is familiar yet completely new — an exhilarating fable for the mind's eye!

Starring Mark Hamill as Luke Skywalker and Anthony Daniels as C-3PO and featuring the Oscar-winning music by John Williams performed by the London Symphony Orchestra along with original movie sound-effects by Ben Burtt this 6 1/2 hour, six cassette, (or 7 CD's) package contains the entire thirteen episodes. the scripts for Star Wars: The Radio Drama. Sound engineer Tom Voegeli expertly mixed the different layers (called tracks) of sounds — dialog, music, and sound effects. The show used the original music of John Williams, and original sound effects of Ben Burtt. The result is an exciting, spine-tingling show that does not need any visuals. The imagination easily forges its own vivid images.

When Star Wars: The Radio Drama debuted in the spring of 1981, it quickly became NPR's most popular show with over 750,000 listeners per episode. This year, in early April, NPR began a special re-broadcast of the thirteen half-hour episodes of Star Wars on its nationwide stations on Sunday nights at 8:00 p.m. When the thirteen episodes of Star Wars are completed in late June, the ten hour radio broadcast of The Empire Strikes Back will begin. Readers should check their local NPR station listings for exact times and dates of the show.

Star Wars fans have long wished for their own copies of Star Wars: The Radio Drama, and now at last their wishes have been granted. In 1992, the HighBridge Company of Minnesota received permission from Lucasfilm Ltd. to reproduce The Star Wars and The Empire Strikes Back radio dramas for sale to the public. The quality of these tapes is unsurpassed, as they were made from the original digital masters by many of the same people who produced the original show, including sound engineer Tom Voegeli.

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK, ON RADIO, CD, AND CASSETTE: SOON

A year after the huge success of the Star Wars Radio Drama, the decision was made to produce a similar radio show of The Empire Strikes Back. In June 1982 the cast and crew of Star Wars: The Radio Drama regrouped in New York City. This time Mark Hamill and Anthony Daniels were joined by another original cast member, Billy Dee Williams, reprising his role as the dashing Lando Calrissian. Noted actor John Lithgow was the voice of Yoda.

Empire debuted on National Public Radio stations on February 14, 1983. The ten-episode show thrilled listeners just as much as its predecessor, and like Star Wars, there were many new and expanded scenes. We got an intimate feel of what it was like to be a soldier in the icy trenches on Hoth, and we gained a better understanding of Lando Calrissian's bureaucratic hassles while trying to keep Cloud City from running out of gas.

National Public Radio plans to re-broadcast this exciting show starting in July, and in October The Empire Strikes Back will be released on Cassette and Compact Disk. The Empire Strikes Back Radio Drama is also included on CD in the Collector's Edition.

Welcome to the George Lucas Exhibition

By Pamela E. Roller

This July, C-3PO will be polished and rested, the Rebel Blockade Runner will be tuned up and ready for space travel and the Ark of the Covenant will be prepared to unleash its power on evildoers. These pieces, along with some 600 other gems from the archives of Lucasfilm history will be transported to Japan, where they will be displayed in an exhibit that will tour eight to ten cities, July 1993-September 1994.

In this unprecedented exhibit of George Lucas' work, tens of thousands of people will see firsthand the puppets, figures, props, costumes, storyboards and artwork that have made Lucasfilm come alive onscreen. With a couple of exceptions (The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles, Captain Eo and Star Tours), the exhibit will include items from virtually all of Lucas' work.

Preparation for this multimillion dollar exhibit has not taken place overnight. Planning began over a year and a half ago, when the Japanese company, Hata International (which has sponsored many traveling art exhibitions throughout Japan), approached Lucasfilm about organizing the exhibit. Lucasfilm quickly seized the opportunity to treat the Japanese people to a behind-the-scenes look at the imaginative genius of George Lucas—his swashbuckling heroes and heroines, his concept of fast-paced high-adventure and his master storytelling.

Don Bies, who has worked in a variety of positions at Lucasfilm and ILM (as R2-D2 handler, archivist, model and creature maker, to name a few), is playing an important role in transforming the initial idea of an exhibition of this magnitude into a full-blown reality. Currently, he and a staff of six model and creature makers (John Goodson, Marghe McMahon, Paul Theren, Nelson Hall, Chuck Wiley and Mark Rosenblum) are busy restoring and refurbishing several of the items that will be part of the exhibit.

Bies says, "We are doing restoration work because a lot of models and creatures have decayed, broken or are missing pieces." By the time the exhibit is ready to travel, Bies and his staff will have worked on as many as 73 items.

Thus far, items that Bies and his staff have worked on include the full-size Imperial Speeder Bike, the full-size Land Speeder, a miniature Land Speeder and the Imperial Star Destroyer—all from the Star Wars trilogy, as well as the miniature mine cars and figures from Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom.

"We also stripped

THE YOUNG INDIANA JONES
CHRONICLES NOVEL: THE MATA
HARI AFFAIR (L133)

On leave from the army, teenage Indy was thirsting for adventure and knowledge. Courtesy of Mata Hari, he learned a lesson in lying, spying, and love that he'd never forget! This extraordinary woman was very possibly a German spy on a heartless mission to win the war for her country, at whatever cost to the Allies. Caught between passion and honor, Young Indy would be forced to choose sides in a battle he could easily lose!

PRICE: $4.99-US, $5.99-CAN., $6.99-FOR.

INDIANA JONES AND THE INTERIOR WORLD (L106D)

Fable holds that the Hollow Earth, or the Interior World, is a magical realm peopled by an advanced race of humans and reamed by beasts of legend and antiquity. Indy, on a journey with Marcus Brody, travels from Easter Island to New England, from the isle of Chiloe back to the gateway of the Interior world, where the presence of the unicorn's horn Indy found in the novel, The Unicorn's Legacy, has upset the balances between worlds.

Now both realms are in danger of complete destruction and only Indy can save them! PRICE: $4.99-US, $5.99-CAN., $6.99-FOR.

REBEL BASE
MODEL KIT
(L25P)

A. THE VALLEY OF THE KINGS: Explore the ancient land of the pharaohs and meet famous figures Lawrence of Arabia and Howard Carter. Will you encounter a cursed tomb? Or will you make an astounding archaeological discovery? Only you can choose.

B. SOUTH OF THE BORDER: It's 1916 and you're on the U.S.-Mexico border when you become involved in the Mexican Revolution. Will you survive the firing squad? Or will you become a key participant in the Mexican Revolution? You decide.

C. REVOLUTION IN RUSSIA: It's 1917. You're working as a spy for the French embassy when you're caught by the Russian Revolution. Will you survive? Or will you become a key participant in the Russian Revolution? Only you, as Indiana Jones, can choose your own adventure.

THE MAKING OF THE YOUNG INDIANA JONES CHRONICLES (L125)

Broad in scope, deep in vision, The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles is a story of how the wonder of knowledge and learning led to a lifetime of even greater adventure. Now let Dan Madsen be your guide behind-the-scenes and discover the adventures the cast and crew had to go through to bring this new series to life. PRICE: $4.99-U.S., $5.50-CAN., $5.99-FOR.

INDIANA JONES AND THE UNICORN'S LEGACY (L128)

Some say the unicorn's horn came from an animal made extinct by the Great Flood. Others say the horn is an effective antidote to poison and a mystical relic. Indy discovers that the horn's power is less than benevolent, and the same could be said about the intentions of a certain beautiful art historian. PRICE: $4.99-U.S., $5.50-CAN., $5.99-FOR.

By Salman A. Nensi

David Prowse is an avid jazz enthusiast who loves to read books about famous murders and mysteries as well as the novels of Dick Francis, Frederick Forsyth and Jack Higgins. He is involved with many charitable organizations and as an actor has performed in works by Terry Gilliam, Stanley Kubrick and William Shakespeare. He is, however, remembered most for his role as the evil Lord Darth Vader in George Lucas' Star Wars trilogy.

You haven't seen Prowse on the screen or television recently as he hasn't been doing much acting since Return of the Jedi. "When I was doing Star Wars, I had to make a decision because the government was employing me to do the road safety campaign in Great Britain," says Prowse. "I was the figurehead for the Green Cross Code campaign. I used to travel all over Great Britain giving talks to children about road safety. The government decided that they wanted to employ me for about seven months of the year but in two distinct spots — April, May, June and July and again in September, October, November and into December. They wanted a commitment from me that I would be available to do those two spots every year for as long as the campaign was going on. I had to make a decision as to whether I carried on trying to get other acting roles or whether I put myself into the road safety campaign which, if I did, would mean mucking up the year. Nobody will employ you if you're only available five months of the year. I decided the road safety thing was more important. I wanted to be involved and felt that I was doing something good, inasmuch as we were reducing the road accident figures in Great Britain by enormous amounts. We actually finished up by reducing the road accident figures by over half which is a tremendous campaign.

"At first," the actor continues, "it was decided that the commercials would go out on television twice a year. But after the first time they were shown there was a snag. Many mothers wrote in to say that their four and five-year olds were still running out into the middle of the road without warning, and when remonstrated with, they answered, 'Oh, the Green Cross Code Man will be there to save me.'

"Of course, this was quite reasonable really, because we'd introduced the effect of my appearing and disappearing on the roads like magic, and my protection was implicit in the words with which we finished the film: 'Every time you cross the road, always use the Green Cross Code.' So we made a second set of commercials which finished, 'Always use the Green Cross Code, because I won't be there when YOU cross the road.' Not so hot on metre, perhaps, but effective."

Prowse started out in life as "a tall, skinny cripple. I'd had some problems with one of my legs, and at the age of 17, I was in a leg-iron. After four years, the doctors told me to throw away the iron because they couldn't find anything wrong with me.

"It was funny taking that leg-iron off. Of course, I was glad to see it go, but it was almost as if I had thrown away an essential part of me. I tended to use the leg-iron as a crutch, not only for myself but for the world at large. If I was hurrying for a bus, for example, the driver would see this long streak hobbling along winging the leg-iron and he would stop and wait for me. Now no one could see I had been ill, and no matter how oddly I ran, the bus driver now did not wait — I was just another mug who had missed the bus. So it took some time to adjust.

"The doctors told me to start exercising. At the time I was 6'5" and weighed about 160 lbs. I started body building and got progressively bigger and bigger. About ten years later I finished up at around 240 lbs. It was then that I got invited to enter the Mr. Universe contest."

Prowse entered the contest but felt something was missing. There seemed to be little purpose to the contest and after all his work to get into shape, standing on stage flexing his biceps was a bit of a let-down. "I felt you ought to be able to do something with what you've developed. So then I decided to go into weightlifting proper. I started off by doing strength sets which is three

In the midst of all the competitions Prowse held several odd jobs, even taking positions as a bouncer for a London dance club. After being at Crystal Palace for five years, Prowse then turned his energies to the Highland Games. He became the world's third best caber tosser and toured all over the world giving exhibitions of Highland Games. "I spent three years traveling and doing

"I am a very physical person and I was left pretty much to my own devices as to how I was going to play Darth Vader. Such an ominous character, I had to make him as villainous as possible. I had to make everybody subservient to Lord Vader." Of the three movies, Empire is Prowse's favorite.

specific lifts which weightlifters use to perform with. Then I had a match with the then British Olympic Champion and he told me I was good enough to specialize in the three Olympic lifts. I met him in the British Championships that year, 1961, and I came in third. The following year, I beat him and became the British Heavyweight Weightlifting champion. I retained the title for another two years."

He then went on to enter the Empire and Commonwealth Games in Perth, Australia, and later entered the World Weightlifting Championship in Budapest. Upon returning to England, he took over as Director of Training at the National Sports Center in Crystal Palace, training some of Great Britain's best weightlifters.

these exhibitions. Then I came home and set up this gym. I've been here ever since, about twenty-three years now."

Unlike some celebrities whose names are only in the ads, Prowse runs his gym himself. "I'm here all day from ten o'clock in the morning to nine o'clock in the evening. If you come here you'll see my name on the door — everybody that comes into my gym gets a modicum of personal training." The London Sunday Times called Prowse, "Probably the most celebrated one-to-one personal trainer in the country." Prowse has helped a great number of celebrities in their fitness quest including Vanessa Redgrave, Stephanie Powers, Christopher Reeve (for his part in Superman), Cary Elwes (for his part in The Princess Bride), The Right Honourable Edward Heath (former Prime Minister of Great Britain) and his Royal Highness Prince Khalid Bin Sultan bin Abdul Azziz of Saudi Arabia.

Five years ago, Prowse sustained a gym-related injury to his right hip. The injury eventually turned his hip arthritic. "I had a hip replacement operation in January 1990 but I had been hobbling around for 18 months waiting for the operation." During that 18 months Prowse developed a kind of neuropathy which destroyed the nerve endings leading down to his foot thus destroying his sense of pain. Prowse's ankle was severely damaged over the months but he was unaware of the worsening condition of his ankle because he couldn't feel the pain. He now wears a calliper and can get around reasonably well. He jokes, "I'm not acting again unless they offer me the lead role in a remake of Ironsides!"

Prowse never wanted to be an actor as a child, he had wanted to play on England's rugby team. His first acting job came about as a result of his job as a sports equipment sales rep. "It was 1964 and I had just retired since I wasn't selected for the Olympic Games in '64 and I was a sales rep traveling to all the sports shops and gymnasiums trying to sell equipment. One of the places I used to call on was the Tough Guys Agency for stunt men. They asked me if I would be interested in working in show business. I told them I'd never acted before in my life and they said not to worry about it — we'd cross that hurdle when we came to it. Within two weeks, I got a phone call telling me to get to the Merlin Theatre — one of the big West End London Theatres. Bernard Miles (now Sir Bernard) was producing a play called Don't Let The Summer Come and they needed somebody like me."

What they needed was an actor to play the part of Death. All Death had to do was to pick an actor up very slowly and very symbolically and make it look as if the actor was floating away. "It foreshadowed Darth Vader because I was dressed head to toe in black. Black shroud, black gloves, black socks. Nobody could see anything. They said they needed the actor, who was wrapped in red velvet, lifted off the bed and carried off stage in the very last scene of the play." The producer and director looked at Prowse with uncertainty and asked if he could do the moves required. He assured them that he could indeed lift the actor but they remained unconvinced and requested a demonstration. The actor, however, was not looking forward to being picked up by Prowse "because he'd been dropped about six times by all these other struggling actors. So I scooped him up and said, 'Where would you like him?'" They asked Prowse if he could do that twice nightly and he responded with, "If you pay me enough, I'll do it as many times as you like." He got the job.

The part of Death let Prowse acquire his Actor's Equity Union card. Now he was a fully unionized actor and began making television commercials and playing bit parts — The Saint, The Avengers, Beyond the Fringe and so on. Prowse played an alien in the science fiction classic Space: 1999, The Beta Cloud episode. His movie credits include parts in Casino Royale with Peter Sellers, Terry Gilliam's Jabberwocky and Stanley Kubrick's A Clockwork Orange. For the BBC, he played the part of Charles the Wrestler in Shakespeare's As You Like It. "I worked with lots of people but I always played the villain, put in to make the hero look good. The heroes always seemed to have a big fight with me at the finish and I eventually got killed or shot or got knocked over the balcony and other things like that."

Having done everything from horror to action adventure, from comedy to Shakespeare, Prowse picks horror films as his favorite. "I enjoy acting and some acting jobs are actually fantastic to do. Horror films really are fun to work on whereas comedies are not as much fun to do as you would think. I like horror films and the way everybody acts and reacts and jokes around with the props and things. They're much funnier to work on."

Working with Stanley Kubrick on A Clockwork Orange, Prowse acquired a reputation. Stanley Kubrick is known in the industry as a very difficult taskmaster and if Prowse could work for him, it was felt he could work for anybody. In 1975, George Lucas went to England to cast Star Wars and had seen some of Prowse's work. When they met he offered Prowse his choice of two parts. The first was a character called Chewbacca. "I said to him, 'What the hell is a Chewbacca?' And Lucas said it was like a hairy gorilla that goes through the film on the side of the heroes. All I could think of was three months in a gorilla suit. So I asked about the second role. Lucas said the other one's the big villain of the film, a character called Darth Vader. I told him not to say any more, I'd take the villain part." Why would an actor take the part of an evil villain over that of one of the good guys? "If you think back to all the movies you've seen where there were goodies and baddies, you always remember the baddies. Think about all the James Bond movies — you remember Goldfinger, Dr. No, Odd Job, you remember Jaws, you remember all these characters but you tell me who played James Bond in these movies." Having given Lucas the same reasons, the Star Wars director turned to Prowse and told him he had made a wise decision because no one was going to forget Darth Vader.

"When Star Wars opened I thought I got the raw end of the deal. It seemed to me there was a concentrated effort to preserve Darth Vader's anonymity at my expense. Yet I had played him and he had become a cult figure. I was determined to get the credit for it. I took on two press agents, prepared a brochure about myself and answered all my own fan mail. It worked amazingly well."

Playing Darth Vader may seem difficult to some actors as the audience cannot see your face nor your eyes but for Prowse this kind of role was nothing new. "I've always found that no matter what I've got in the way of costume or heavy make-up, I can always get part of myself across in the character. I'm a very physical person and I was left pretty much to my own devices as to how I was going to play Darth Vader. Such an ominous character, I had to make him as villainous as possible. I had to make everybody subservient to Lord Vader. You'll notice, for instance in Star Wars, whenever I move around it's a very sort of physical move and everybody has to run to catch up with me." Prowse established a special walk for Lord Vader and continued using these very physical characteristics in The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi. Of the three, Empire is his favorite.

From the very beginning, the audience did not really know that Prowse was the man behind the black mask in the Star Wars films. They might have recognized the voice of James Earl Jones, but the figure of Darth Vader was something of a mystery. "When Star Wars opened I thought I got the raw end of the deal," explains Prowse. "It seemed to me there was a concentrated effort to preserve Darth Vader's anonymity at my expense. Yet I had played him and he had become a cult figure. I was determined to get the credit for it. I took on two press agents — one in England and another in the States — prepared a brochure about myself, and answered all my own fan mail."

And did it work? "Amazingly well," he answers. "I've never stopped being asked to make appearances, to open stores, to attend science fiction meetings. I've been on several publicity tours in the States."

Prowse is currently in the process of writing three books. The first is all about his globe-trotting days while weightlifting and working in the movies. Prowse promises that it will contain "loads of pictures of me working with famous people around the world. I think that's what the public likes to see." The second book is about arthritis. "As soon as I got the arthritis problems, people began writing to me from all over the world offering me arthritis cures and pills and potions and special diets. It's very interesting when you condense all of this so I thought I'd write a book about all my experiences with arthritis and doctors. Up until about a month ago, the doctors were still talking about taking my leg off, just sort of matter of fact like. 'Your ankle's not going to get any better so we'll have to take your leg off, just chop it off.' I looked at them and said, 'No, no, I think I'll hang onto it for a little while longer if you don't mind.' His third book project is a retrospective of old time weightlifters, boxers, strongmen and wrestlers.

In addition to his writing, Prowse continues working with many charitable organizations. He is involved with the Variety Club of Great Britain, The U.S.'s National Organization on Disability and works with Eunice Kennedy Shriver on the Special Olympics. Prowse has just finished a ten-year term as the Special Ambassador to the International Decade of the Disabled Person, an appointment made by former President Ronald Reagan. Recently, Prowse formed a charitable organization called The Force Against Arthritis. The charity was formed to raise ten million pounds over the next five years with part of the money going towards the establishment of a new arthritis research center at England's Institute of Orthopaedics.

With all he's doing it's a wonder Prowse has time for anything else, however, over the next few months he'll be appearing at Creation Conventions all over the United States answering questions and talking about his Star Wars memories.

Prowse loves receiving fan mail and answers each and every letter. Fans are more than welcome to write to Prowse in care of his fitness center. Dave Prowse Fitness Centres Limited, 12 Marshalsea Road, London, England, SE1 1HL.

down the Ark of the Covenant and C-3PO, and we've fixed up all of the imperfections on their surfaces. Both pieces are being re-gilded—new gold plating is being applied to them," Bies notes.

Onscreen, C-3PO and the Ark may look like they are made from metal or gold. This is only an illusion. Actually, they have been transformed by "movie magic." "C-3PO is made from several different materials," says Bies. "His arms are made from aluminum and there are a lot of little detail pieces that are on his head and chest that are also aluminum. Pretty much everything else is fiberglass. His trunk, feet and hands are a material called bakelite, which is a flexible plastic." Bies continues, "The Ark of the Covenant, on the other hand, the top and the very bottom of the legs are fiberglass, and the actual box is wood. It's sealed and primed before the gold is put on."

Returning each piece to its original state for the Japan tour has been a priority for Bies. "The only replica will be Yoda, but he will still have his original costume and the original props that go with him. Everything else in the exhibit is as near to the original as possible."

He notes, "As we were doing the work on the Rebel Blockade Runner, we realized that it had been changed considerably from the way it looked in Star Wars, because they had used it as a background ship in Return of the Jedi. So, we're restoring it back to the way it was originally. That entails adding some guns that had been taken off, blocking over some windows that had been cut into, repainting it and rebuilding the antennae array."

Bies enjoys the restoration process, saying, "It's actually been fun, kind of like an archeological dig. For instance, we were trying to find the original color of one of the models, so we were sanding through layers of paint that had been put on it over the years. When we found it, we said, 'Ah! That's the color it was!'"

It takes some special skills to refurbish the pieces. Bies says that model-building skills are a must. "Basically all of the people working on the restoration are model and creature makers." He adds, "We don't have a bunch of engineers working here, but we do need people who have their wits about them and are able to understand how things work and how to make molds. With Yoda there are so many parts. The same with C-3PO. I think there are 39 pieces to him. A Stormtrooper has something like 26."

Fans may ask "Why take the exhibit to Japan? Why not take it on tour in the U.S., where the Lucasfilm phenomenon began?"

One reason is that the upcoming exhibit in Japan exemplifies the universal appeal of Lucas' work. His films are very popular in Japan, and he has become a veritable folk hero there. Evidently, the Japanese are just as thrilled as Americans are with Indy, Luke, Leia, Willow and the things last longer. Also, as we begin work on some of the creatures, we'll need to use sculpting skills."

The restoration process has been painstaking and time-consuming. Depending upon the piece, the restoration process can take just a couple of days or can stretch into several weeks. For instance, the Speeder Bike took seven days, while the Rebel Blockade Runner will take about nine days. At least ten days will be needed for C-3PO.

Puppets and figures like Yoda and C-3PO take more time because of the number of pieces involved. Recreating another Yoda, as a display model only, will take 20-30 days.

"If we were to do a Yoda puppet," notes Bies, "it would take longer, because we would have to redo rest of the Lucasfilm characters.

However, the main reason for the exhibit going to Japan initially is funding. According to Bies, "Lucasfilm has been open to the idea of an appropriate party (such as a museum) taking the pieces on exhibit. In the past, there has been interest in touring it through the United States. But since it is such a big project, it has been difficult to find funding."

Enter Hata International. "Hata International was the first company to come through with the funding for it," says Bies. "It is a big project. Mr. Hata has a 'wish list' of over 600 items from the archives plus artwork, storyboards, that sort of thing. The logistics involved—the restoring and the packing—is all very expensive."

Representatives of Lucasfilm, ILM (which is coordinating much of the work) and Hata International have met many challenges in preparation for this exhibit.

Bies notes that one of the main challenges has been the language barrier. "We are mainly communicating by fax. Although Mr. Hata understands English very well... there has been a lot of time spent faxing back and forth, clarifying what each of us means by what we've written." He adds, "There's also a bit of a cultural barrier between the way the Japanese do business and the way we do business."

Lucasfilm's focus on restoration and preservation of its film history has helped during the preparation for the Japan exhibit. The commitment to preservation has not always been a priority, however. It was not until 1983 that George Lucas decided to even start an archive. Back then, Lucasfilm staff took whatever was still lying around and simply hailed it to storage in an old warehouse.

In 1991 things changed. That was the year the 28,000 sq. ft. archive building was completed at Skywalker Ranch. It currently houses everything from models, props, matte paintings and costumes to a portion of the research library, the

ILM and taken stuff from there."

And how about items from current projects, like The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles?

"We don't have anything from the Young Indiana Jones shows yet because they are using them, keeping them in production. At one point or another, all of the stuff they can spare will come here."

Some fans may wonder why it is necessary for Bies and his staff to do any restoration at all for the Japan exhibit, since the pieces have been safely housed in the new archives building. There are several reasons, one of which is, "The warehouse that originally housed the pieces was just that, a warehouse that had no insulation, no heat, no air conditioning," explains Bies. "So, it went through extremes in temperature. That probably speeded up the decay in some things. Plus, this stuff gets beaten up while they're shooting the films, and when they were done they just put it in the warehouse."

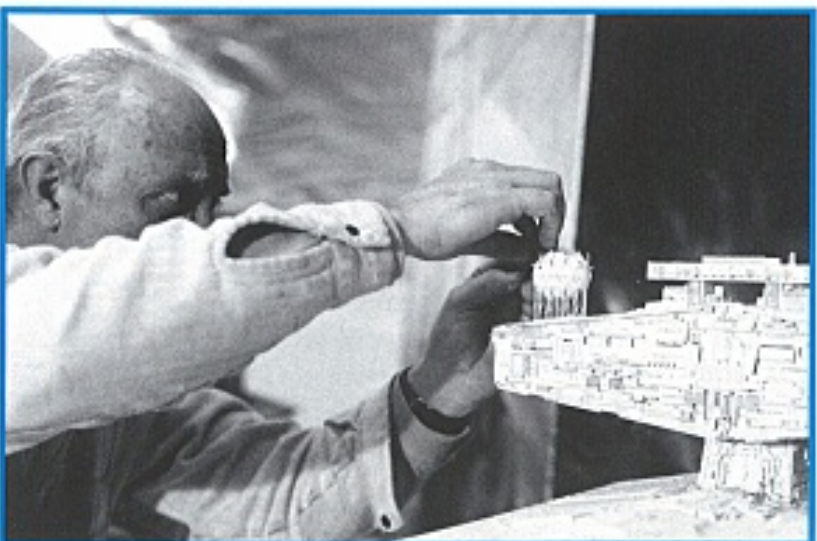

Besides, when a film crew is on location in the middle of a shoot—in Hawaii, hustling to get one last take before it rains, or in Tunisia, enduring the desert heat—preserving models, props and costumes for posterity is not a priority.

Bies adds, "And a lot of the stuff, especially from Star Wars, was not built to last long. Some of the pieces have structural damage because they were only meant to last several months. Some have been here since 1977. We have to go in and rebuild and perform major operations on some things."

It has been particularly difficult to preserve the puppets used in Lucas' films. The foam latex pieces used for the puppets decay over film and licensing archives and a few of Lucas' personal effects. Since 1988, Bies has helped maintain the archives.

"There are things that have been lost over the years because people didn't know what they were," says Bies. "Or, people did know what things were, and they stole them."

Now anything we can get our hands on I grab. I've also scoured time. Yoda is one of the casualties from decay. Fortunately, Lucasfilm can still use the original molds to recreate him and restore his impish smile and worldwise face. Bies understands the importance of preserving Lucasfilm artifacts. "They are our company's 'crown jewels,' as some magazine once called them. It really is film history. The movies are so popular and so identifiable."

He continues, "I think it's really important to the company. But it's also important to the film community and the entertainment world. It would be a shame to repeat what has happened to classics like King Kong, where the original figure was allowed to decay, or Gone with the Wind and The Wizard of Oz, where things have been lost."

So, the collaboration between Hata International and Lucasfilm has served several purposes that in the end will be well-worth the challenges and difficulties faced during the months of planning the exhibit. Not only will a new culture of people be able to enjoy the magic and excitement that Lucasfilm has offered a generation of American audiences, but the exhibit has also renewed Lucasfilm's commitment to restoration and preservation, so its film history can be experienced by generations to come. Who knows, the Japan tour may even open the door for Lucasfilm exhibits elsewhere. Until then, フォースはいつも我々と共に... The Force will always be with you....
